To whom it may concern,

As a young highly motivated computer science student I am incredibly interested in applying for the advertised Fall developer internship position with Normative, Sweden. After reading about Normative I feel strongly that it's a company I would like to work for. I love the idea of using computers to help companies cut their emissions. The opportunity to use my passions to help people is extremely exciting.

Currently I am attending Lamar University in pursuit of a Bachelors degree in Computer Science. At Lamar I am an Honors student, Computer science tutor, and ambassador for the Lamar foreign exchange program. Last Semester I participated in an exchange program, in which I was able to study Computer Science at Seoul National University of Science and Technology.

While studying in Korea I was hired to work as a React.js/Redux developer for an ambitious Korean startup specializing in food delivery. At that position I worked developing progressive CRUD web applications for the management of content, and updating the corresponding REST api as needed.

When not working professionally I code in my free time. Currently I'm working on a full-stack personal project for logging data about my own exercise habits. I also enjoy writing articles about technology and maintain a blog. Being a developer isn't just a job to me, it's my passion and I hope to bring that mindset to the internship position.

In closing, as someone who has worked in a startup before I know that when you're a member of a small team you never just have one job. Though despite these pressures, the environment of constant self betterment and continuous learning that startups create is one I positively enjoy.

Normative is a company whose goals I respect, and one I would love the opportunity to work for.

Thank you for your time,

Chandler Barlow
